

COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES ON MONDAY NIGHT

Class of Six Graduate From St. Vincent De Paul's High School

Beautiful exercises marked the forty-sixth annual commencement of St. Vincent de Paul's high school on Monday evening.

The auditorium on North McArthur street was filled to its capacity with the friends and relatives of the young graduates long before the hour of the exercises at eight o'clock.

The decorations consisted of blue and gold, the colors of the graduating class, with red flowers of early summer and green foliage.

An excellent program was carried out, consisting of orations, essays and musical numbers.

The selection by the boys' chorus and those by the girls' chorus were exceptionally well rendered. Piano solos were given by Miss Margaret Weber and by Miss Margaret Lambert, which showed splendid instruction.

During the singing of the Marseillaise a drill was executed and a French flag was carried. The special drummer for this number was Charles Feaster.

The first oration on the program, "Patriotism," was given by John Hayes. He pointed out how time has not decreased our patriotism, but has tended to increase it, this being shown two years ago when the call to arms came. America responded freely with men. Even in our midst everyone gave freely, with St. Vincent de Paul's parish boasting of 169 service stars, one gold star, one Red Cross.

The essay, "Our Country," was well delivered by Miss Helen Seyers. She told of America's discovery some 400 years ago, and much of its history up to the present time. She said our country is young in years, but is looked on as the hope of the world.

Paul McDonough gave a thorough sketch of Theodore Roosevelt's life, telling of his handicap physically, while a youth, and how he overcame this and grew to be a strong man, a leader of men, a soldier and a hero.

Owen O'Rourke gave the life of the recently made famous strategist, Marshal Foch. He described him as being the anvil on which the famous Marne victory was forged. He spoke of him as the world's most renowned hero, a master strategist, and the victor of the Marne.

In the essay, "The American Soldiers," Miss Dorothy Andreas asked where we might find more noble deeds than our soldiers had done, and said another page had been added to our history, when our own sons and brothers became heroes. She said the American soldier had been admitted a success by every leader known—they are known especially by their spirit of endurance.

William Peterson followed this by an oration lauding the American sailor, saying that an American sailor had never been a traitor to his flag, never had the name of an American sailor been linked with a Benedict Arnold.

Rev. L. W. Mulhane presented the diplomas to the six members of the class, saying that 184 persons had now graduated from St. Paul's school. He said that today, of all time, the rising generation should know the pages of American history, and unless they do know them they will not be ready to recognize the dangers which confront them.

He then presented a diploma to Lawrence Welker, who would have been a member of the graduating class had he not enlisted in the service of his country. Rev. Mulhane spoke of him as one who has received a diploma from Uncle Sam.

Rev. Watterson of Newark was then called upon to give a few remarks. He responded, saying that without flattery this was the best school commencement he had ever attended. He said the orations and essays delivered by the class members were well given.

Diplomas were presented to the following graduates: Dorothy Marie Andreas, Helen Joyce Seyers, John Wilbur Hayes, Paul Vincent McDonough, Owen Xavier O'Rourke, William Aloysius Peterson.

Just before the exercises came to a close, Rev. Fr. Mulhane presented certificates of promotion to the members of the eighth grade who will take up their work in the high school next fall.

These pupils are: Lucille Blubaugh, Beatrice Head, Eunice Nixon, Wanda Ruchten, Margaret Weber, Helen Shaw, Harriet Porter, Mary McCann, Robert Hayes, Carol O'Rourke.
